I wish I didn't have a reason to cry at my own graduation. I can just see it now, and I know that there will be tears in my eyes, real tears, as real as the cafeteria and the smell of freshly painted halls and the screech of chalk on the blackboard.

I won't be just another whimpering, sniffing school girl, begging to be comforted by her peers. I will have a reason for my tears. I am really leaving Plaza Park School, a place that I have taken for granted for more than my share of years.

I took a walk down the primary section a few days ago, and it was hard to keep those tears back then. All of those tiny children looking up at me in an eerily respectful silence made me ill at ease.

For a fleeting moment I wondered why they were looking up at me with such wide-eyed admiration, and for a moment I actually thought I was one of them again, being led by the hand in long straight lines down the corridors of a world very separated from that of any other.

Then I came to my senses. They were looking at me because I was so tall and out of their reach. To some of the smaller ones I might just as well have been "Teacher," because all "Big People" are basically the same to them.

It then occurred to me that their world is very different than mine because the hand that once held mine to guide my way is now letting go, the long empty corridors are now revealing hidden doors.

Yes, I'll have tears in my eyes, tears that reveal eyes, tears return, that if I ever return it will be as a bystander, a hopelessly dull, uninteresting, detached bystander.

I know I will cry. I'm funny that way, I guess.

THREE CHEERS FOR THE EIGHTH GRADE

For years, lower classmen yearn to become the greatest eighth grade. Every year, the eighth grade is a little bit better than the one before it was. It may come as a big disappointment to some highly ambitious 7th graders - but, there will never be an eighth grade as outstanding as ours has been.

The 1968-69 eighth graders started out fantastically in the very beginning. We had the best athletes, actors and actresses, singers, dancers, writers, talkers, and the most ingenious people that were ever born. Our eighth grade is a symbol of teamwork, fellowship, and ambition.

When they made this eighth grade they "broke the mold." We have put on the best programs, displays, and meets.

For a long time the eighth grades have been getting better and better. As all things do, they have reached a high point (us). Now, naturally, the successors will slowly (but surely) decline.. It is just something that our successors will have to face up to and then live with it.

As for the Plaza '68-'69 eighth graders.....we're not through with Evansville yet. We plan to be the greatest freshmen, sophomore, junior, and senior classmen, too.

It's Been A Good Year

It's been a good year,
It's been a swell year,
A year we will never forget.....
There were parties and dances; new spring romances;
Basketball & football & baseball & track.
May day, recreation, now the class dance and on to graduation.
It's been a good year,
It's been a swell year,
A good year for us.

Pam Richmond

REMEMBER?

I wish I could go back through my life and relive some of the more important and memorable moments, moments such as seeing my baby brother for the very first time or moving to a new town and meeting new friends.

I would also like to remember, for as long as I live, my eighth grade year in school. I hope to remember my friends, teachers, and most of all the knowledge taught to me. I do, however, have many years before me to look forward to and these I also wish to remember.

Fourteen years of my life are gone. I have only memories to show for them. There will be many other things to remember in the future, and some things will be forgotten, but I treasure my mind and its capacity to remember. I pray and hope I never lose my memory for what then, have I lived for?

I WISH I COULD BE THE KIND OF PERSON I WANT TO BE

The person I want to be is a person who can understand all the people's points of view. I want to be a person who can be able to sort out the better answers to problems from the worse. I want to be one who can help this world just a little more by doing something constructive, instead of destructive. I also want to be one who will have more common sense than knowledge, for knowledge is fine up to a point, but then common sense reigns supreme to the answers of perplexing situations.
